Ode

Oh lyric limb of time decade dangling itself over the decadence of one gone by 70

simple dynamism of form stretches over hope of its own possibilities flexes its false inheritance to strip and smooth away the sloth of ten-year unfulfilled vows and stepping grasping clean and clear we declare "now"
not as a soar and shout of ecstasy but calm, close, we hold cradle glean and lean on tomorrow foolish prophets of sorrow the chorus can still chant
"let the good prevail!"
we do not fling gold idealism into a dazzle or display the frenzied bacchanalian youth but silent, all-eyed truth says, reach and be oh seventy.

CATHLEEN PATRICIA BAGDON

Still, it was beautiful to be alive. He plucked a small purple flower in the grass, held it to his eyes and peered into the tiny, narrow chalice; veins ran through it, hair thin tiny organs lived there; life pulsed there and desire trembled, just as in a woman's womb, in a thinker's brain. Why did one know so little? Why could not one speak with this flower?

KATHERINE PARKER LEROYER

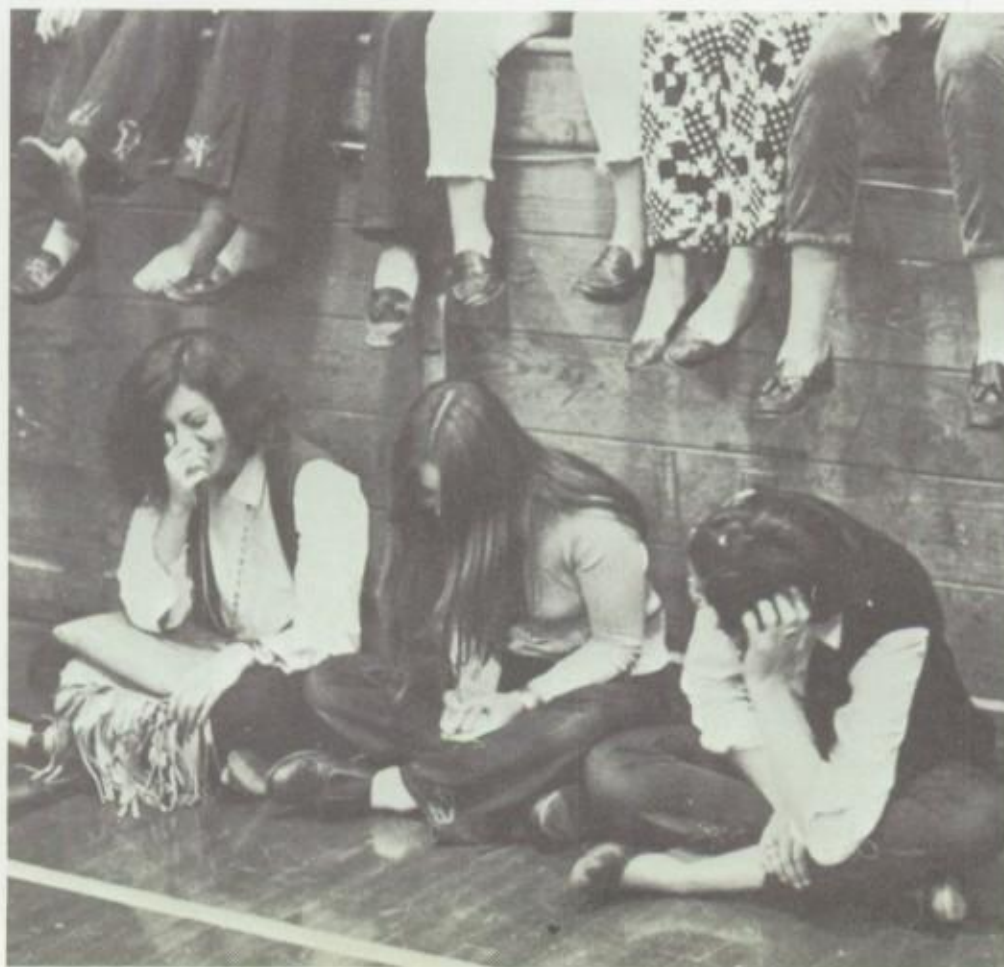

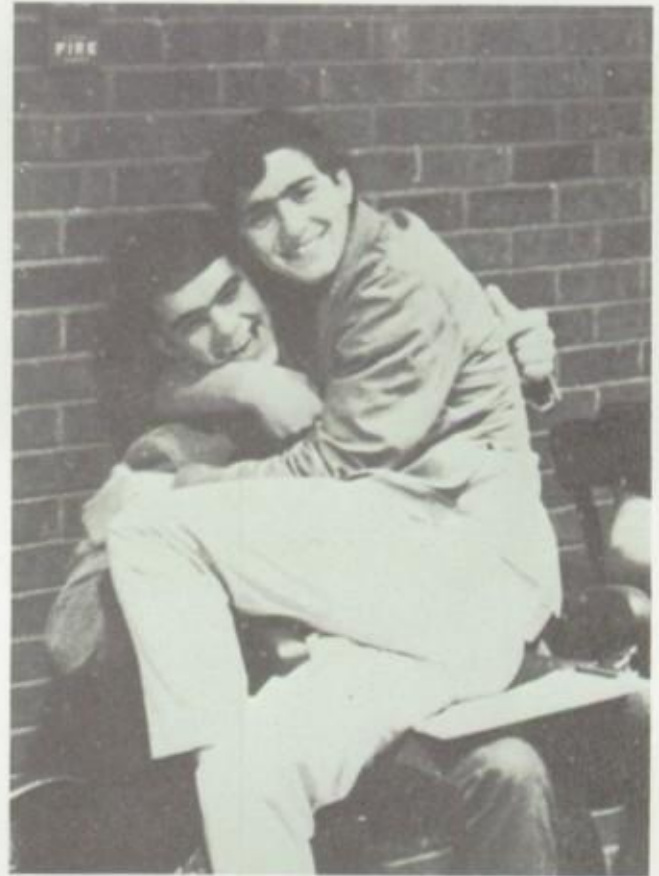

*We need so very much to know both you and I
